A: When running on the offline machine which has MATLAB installed but no Internet connection, you can either: Uninstall MATLAB from the offline machine or Use "Run Matlab offline" under "Start MATLAB" in the shortcut menu. Depending on the 'unexpected error' message and its different possible causes, you may also need to reinstall MATLAB from your MATLAB folder (hold the shift key as you click and choose the "newer version" option) or consider upgrading to a newer license level, although this does depend on when you purchased your license (the free trial may work on the lower license versions). The full list of MATLAB License levels can be found here: The two-finger click on the MATLAB icon should launch your MATLAB application under your current user account, which will update the license file automatically. Note that the installation key should not change, nor should the default license path. The license key will stay the same, but the license path will change to a local directory, which you can point MATLAB to manually if it becomes a problem. You need to download the license file when you install the license, usually from the MATLAB page: The installation key (and the license key, minus the box-number part) are entered on the License page at: and as this is a one-time-only value you cannot change it, nor can you import the license key from an old MATLAB account. The license number is found in the License Center by selecting the "Licenses" tab when you sign in. Each license allows you to use MATLAB on a network license, and we do change the license path every release so if you use the same license number in different machines you will have to reinstall the license each time. If you want to share licenses among machines then you could create a local license that you can distribute. The installer will use the network license if you install from the installer. If there is a problem while you are installing MATLAB 2014a you can update f678ea9f9e
